Could've been better in my opinion. I had no idea what I was doing and I died in the most weirdest and questionable ways. Atmosphere is scary and a few jumpscares but this game is confusing. Should've been a cheaper price.. Just tried out this game, got a few jumpscares and got killed by a rat.. Very good =). Hard. hard.. Hard. hard.. Hard. hard.. Could've been better in my opinion. I had no idea what I was doing and I died in the most weirdest and questionable ways. Atmosphere is scary and a few jumpscares but this game is confusing. Should've been a cheaper price.. Bad birthday is a walking simulator where you are stuck in a cave and you wander around in the dark with just a flashlight. The only interesting part of the game is occasional jump scares, which other games do much better. The game advertises "maximum simulation of real life conditions" which makes me wonder about what kind of lives the developers live where it's realistic for them to look inside a small wooden shack under a mountain to see if it's a great place for a birthday party, then fall into a cave full of zombies. I guess the cave full of zombies is a very realistic real life simulation of caves full of zombies. The graphics aren't terrible for an indie game, but the gameplay itself is on par with most indie games, which is to say, terrible. Apart from the general bland lack of interest in any kind of storytelling in the game (story being kind of the point of walking simulators), to make the game more "difficult" it randomly kills you in unavoidable ways by dropping rocks on you. I'm not sure why the developer decided that was fun, because it isn't. Perhaps they have different ideas to the general gaming public, which is fine unless you want to charge them $5 for a game which fits your idea of fun but not theirs. Speaking of $5, I can't recommend anyone pays that much for an unpolished, pointless, poorly designed game. Even if the developers need the money so they can look for some place for a birthday party other than maximum real-life small wooden shacks in the wilderness.
